Mark Carlson, a San Diego resident and author is passionate about all kinds of history including the history of idioms. Have you ever wondered where we acquired certain phrases and how they became part of our everyday vocabulary? We've all heard them or have used them ourselves. Phrases such as: "it's raining cats and dogs," or "kill 2 birds with 1 stone," or "it costs an arm and a leg," or "break a leg." We know that cats and dogs don't really fall from the sky when we get a real hard rain. We also know that no one is actually going to take an arm and a leg in payment for a purchase. And, when we say break a leg to someone who is going to perform in a play or a recital, we really don't expect to see them in a cast. We hear and use these phrases and we all understand their meaning but now we can learn about their origin.
